

The lack of universally standardized extraction protocols leads to highly inconsistent safety compliance results between different testing laboratories.

Finger painting bypasses the metrology bottleneck entirely.