A meta-analysis of 140,841 participants found no significant association between tattoo exposure and overall skin cancer. The eternal battle against imaginary dermatological demons has been definitively won