

Working in inadequate studio lighting forces the eyes to strain continuously to resolve fine details.

The search for perfect linework required tools normally reserved for astronomy.