

The border between the epidermis and dermis is highly textured and interlocking to maximize surface area for nutrient exchange.

Good fences make very hungry neighbors.