

Carbon black pigment remains present within the continuously renewing epidermis of long healed tattoos.

The surface cells are terrible at letting things go.