

Silicone retaining rings lose their grip over time because internal molecular chains redistribute stress when held at constant stretch.

Stress relaxation ruins the timing of rebellious projectiles