

Pseudomonas bacteria thrive in aquatic environments and represent a significant infection risk for fresh cartilage wounds.

Swamp immersion remains an underperforming strategy for wound care