

Severe inflammation can detach the perichondrium from the underlying cartilage and cause irreversible tissue damage.
Evicting the primary nutrient supplier guarantees a highly predictable collapse.