

Human skin possesses directional tension lines and stretches significantly easier parallel to them. Pushing square pegs into round holes builds character, mostly bad character.