Tattoo needle tips become dull during the process, particularly when penetrating dense skin or using pigments containing solid titanium dioxide particles.

The village blacksmith firmly declined the request to sharpen the blunt cartridges.