

The scab on a fresh tattoo acts as the structural scaffold for settling pigment, and removing it prematurely extracts the ink.

The body was already renovating the property.