

Holding ink components uncovered near open air ducts exposes them to airborne microbial contaminants and filth.
A gentle breeze is the mortal enemy of a freshly opened pigment.