

Silicone is an exceptionally soft material with high surface friction that should only be worn in fully established, healed channels. The friction coefficient remains deeply unappreciated.