Sterilizing polypropylene polymers with gamma radiation violently breaks molecular chains and turns the previously flexible material completely brittle.

Reassembling irradiated polymer dust requires immense patience and very tiny tweezers.