

Blood banks permanently defer donations from individuals who have ever taken medication to treat a human immunodeficiency virus infection.

Elaborate disguises rarely compensate for dropping your pharmaceutical history on the floor.