

Boiling water does not achieve the complete microbial destruction provided by a pressurized steam autoclave.
A little atmospheric reentry burns off the stubborn germs.