

Near-infrared beams reach the retina but provoke no blink reflex because the eye registers nothing.
Mechanical eyelid contraptions are notoriously terrible at guessing games.