
A beam that is harmless against skin can still damage the retina because the eye concentrates the energy.

The human eyeball makes a spectacularly terrible magnifying glass.