

The photochromic dye is encased in a biocompatible polymer shell to prevent the pigment from leaching into the body. The ancient creeping darkness was successfully imprisoned in microscopic plastic balls