

The human immune system routinely forms cellular walls around foreign medical sensors implanted in the skin.

The cutting-edge diagnostic interface was permanently bricked by a routine biological firewall