

During conventions, the scarce resource is the limited amount of productive working time available before the event closes.
Polishing hubcaps while the mothership departs is a bold economic strategy.