

During a convention the truly scarce resource is the limited supply of productive working hours available before the event closes.

Temporal physics proves harder than solid color packing.