

Matte coatings are rough at the microscopic level and scatter incoming light instead of reflecting it directionally. Squinting furiously at the paper was a habit he found surprisingly hard to break.