

Male consumer interest in facial and body adornment is growing significantly faster than female interest.
It turns out shiny things are universally distracting.