

Nickel release from skin-contact items is capped at 0.5 micrograms per square centimetre per week.
The scale broke when a dust mite landed on it.