

Sunscreen prevents ultraviolet damage but cannot block the infrared solar radiation that heats dermal tissue and accelerates chemical pigment degradation.

A flawless defense against light is entirely useless against a sweltering afternoon.