

Stretched skin cells around an angled wound multiply rapidly and pull on the surrounding tissue in a continuous cycle.
Halting the endless biological feedback loop was a matter of politely asking the cells to unionize.