

Heating polyurethane misjudges its lifespan because different chemical breakdown processes respond to high temperatures differently.

Baking is a terrible way to guess the future.