

The likelihood of acquiring bloodborne infections rises significantly when tattoos are applied in nonprofessional settings.
The back of galloping horses remains remarkably poor real estate for tattooing.