

Receiving tattoos from well-meaning friends carries substantially higher risks of viral transmission than visiting regulated professional studios.

Friendship is beautiful, but your closest mate cannot draw straight lines