

Sessions must be spaced widely apart to allow macrophage cells sufficient time to clear the fragmented pigment and for the skin to heal.
The sanitation crew simply goes on strike when asked to haul away an entire mural in an afternoon.