

The human blink reflex is far too slow to provide any natural protection against ultra-short laser pulses.
The heavily armored veteran proudly installs defensive blast shields that slam shut long after the battle is already over.