

Red azo pigments frequently trigger delayed hypersensitivity reactions driven by localized cellular immune responses.
The red ink turns on you without warning.