

The deconstruction process proves effective across polymer formulations cured by thermal and photo methods.
Screaming directly at thermoset composites remains the least effective curing method known to science.