

Medical-grade silicone has low tear strength and is prone to ripping when stressed at threaded interfaces.

The tension was simply too much to handle.