

The goal is to reduce pigment load and contrast to the point where the cover-up design has room to establish itself.

The void is the most important brushstroke.