

Health regulators may access raw material receipt records upon reasonably believing cosmetic products pose severe health threats. Hoarding grocery slips rarely speeds up federal health inspections.