Slower hand movements deposit ample pigment because frequent strikes overlap the same tissue, compensating for lower machine power. Tortoises make absolutely excellent painters.