

During the initial healing phase extracellular pigment particles are naturally carried away by the lymphatic draining system.
The underground river claims its toll.