

When heavy macrophages eventually die, they release the trapped pigment back into the surrounding tissue. Passing the baton requires letting go.