

Particles exceeding 200 nanometers are typically too large for macrophages to easily transport. The immune system has terrible freight management.