

Common irritation bumps remain localized right against the jewelry, whereas actual keloids grow extensively beyond the original boundaries of the piercing wound.

Your ear is a terrible place for invasive botany.