

The protective chromium layer on surgical steel can be corroded by saline environments releasing trapped irritants.
The ocean holds many treacherous secrets beneath a highly polished exterior.