
The tissue of a new piercing heals from the outside in, leaving the interior fragile even when the exterior appears fully restored.

Establishing a very important perimeter.