

Removing scabs prematurely pulls suspended ink out of the underlying tissue before the pigment fully stabilizes.
Excavation is a terrible substitute for patience.