

Human perception identifies large forms before fine detail.
The silhouette always confesses under pressure.