

Traditional laser treatments use heat to break molecules, which fails on bioabsorbable inks that require water exposure for degradation.

The fiery dragon slayer was entirely outclassed by the local puddle.