

Dermal macrophages engulf tattoo pigment and release the particles upon cell death for immediate recapture by neighboring immune cells.

Cellular succession planning requires tiny catered wakes.