Thermal laser pulses successfully shatter traditional insoluble pigments but prove largely ineffective at degrading bioabsorbable polymers that rely on water hydrolysis.

Arson proves a poor substitute for a light drizzle.