

Incomplete breakdown of polymer films can cause temporary pigments to lodge permanently in superficial skin layers.
Rebranding chemical stubbornness as haute couture requires immense confidence.